This week's story looks at events related to ...

Read through the information below and share your thoughts about the popularity of the Taylor Swift friendship bracelets and Devon's project.

Why are Taylor Swift fans sharing bracelets at her concerts?

Fans worldwide have been making and trading friendship bracelets at every Taylor Swift concert on the 152-show tour, as a way to make new friends. They are inspired by the lyric, 'So, make the friendship bracelets, take the moment and taste it', in the song, You're On Your Own, Kid. It's not uncommon for fans to meet up before a concert to create bracelets together, and there are even Facebook groups dedicated to swapping crafting tips and outfit ideas!

After I made the bracelet for my great-grandma, I realised that a lot of older people don't have grandchildren or great-grandchildren to make nice things for them. The whole of Edinburgh is going to be buzzing that weekend and I wanted to make sure that everyone gets to be part of that excitement.

Look at the resource below, which shares some information about the history of friendship bracelets.

Friendship bracelets are ancient. Different versions of them are thought to have originated in many parts of the world. The decorative knots can be traced back to China over 2000 years ago, but it is the indigenous communities of Central and South America that are widely recorded as the first to use friendship bracelets in the way we do today.

In the 1970s and 80s, friendship bracelets rose in popularity. They were used to symbolise peace, love and people uniting.

What were friendship bracelets made from?

Macrame is the process of tying knots into creative and decorative patterns. Ancient friendship bracelets were created using this process. Materials such as grasses, animal fibres or brightly-coloured string could be used.

In the 1970s/80s, it was popular to craft them using embroidery floss or cotton thread. Some were embellished with beads or charms.

In the 2010s, loom band bracelets became a trend. The elastic bracelets were collected, swapped or given to friends.

What makes a good friend?

Reflection

A friend is someone you trust, understand, and can communicate well with. Good friends accept each other for who they are.

Individual Liberty

Our words and actions can have both positive and negative impacts on others. We have the power to make choices that help our friends feel valued.

Protected Characteristics

Learning about and accepting the religions and beliefs of our friends can help us understand one another better and enrich our lives. Friendships can flourish thanks to both similarities and differences.

UN Rights of the Child

We have the right to meet with friends and join groups. Governments should support children to nurture friendships and be part of groups or clubs that they enjoy.

Euros 2024 – Explained!

The Euros has just entered its second week – but how does the tournament actually work? Take a look at this handy guide that tells you all you need to know! The UEFA European Championship is a football tournament held every four years, also known as the Euros. This year, the competition hosts are Germany, and matches will take place at stadiums all over the country. Teams must play a series of qualifying matches to get into the tournament. The hosts are automatically given a spot in the competition. Only 24 countries compete. The teams are divided into six groups of four teams, each team will play the other teams in its group to win points. This is the group stage. The top two, or in some cases three, teams in each group will go on to the knockout stage – where only the winner of each match will go on to the next round. The final of the Euros is due to be played in Berlin on 14th July. Who will you be supporting?

A Special Sighting

What animal can curl into a ball and is covered in scales? It's a pangolin! An incredibly rare type of pangolin has been spotted in Senegal, Africa, for the first time in 23 years. The giant pangolin is endangered, which means there are not many of them left. One of the main reasons for this is poaching. Their meat is considered a delicacy in many parts of Asia and Africa and their scales are sought after, so the animals are hunted and trafficked. These adorable animals are easily caught, as their response to danger is to simply curl up and wait, which means they can just be picked up by poachers. Conservationists are working hard to gather the evidence needed to find hunting groups and arrest those responsible. The recent sighting in Senegal has been most welcome news indeed for pangolin lovers around the world!

Is voting the best way to change things?

I think voting is a good way for everyone to express their opinion, but it's a shame that there will always be some voters who are disappointed. Damian, 9

Elephant Nicknames

A new study has revealed that African elephants have nicknames for each other! Scientists were really excited to discover that the elephants they studied use special noises to call one another. The nicknames are not the usual trumpeting noise that we are used to hearing from elephants, but take the form of low, reverberating rumbles. 'It's really exciting,' said Dr Joyce Poole, from ElephantVoices, who is part of the study's team. 'Elephants live in a pretty complex society. They're quite a bit like ourselves, families are not together all the time, they split up and come back together.' The study discovered that elephants could call to each other in this way from as far away as two kilometres. Dr Poole explained, 'They have a vocalisation that I refer to as a 'let's go' rumble. An elephant will stand and point the direction that she wants to go and call repeatedly. And sometimes the elephants then get involved in a discussion. They call back and forth, and I have often wondered, are they talking about, "Well, I don't want to go to the swamp." I would not be surprised if we found they have place names for the places they go regularly.' The researchers used artificial intelligence to analyse recordings of communication between elephants on two reserves – Amboseli National Park and Samburu National Reserve in Kenya. The recordings were taken over decades, beginning in 1986. Although dolphins and parrots can mimic sounds that they hear, elephants are the only non-human animals to create individual names for their friends and family. Do you know any interesting facts about elephants?

Youngest Radio Station Manager Ever

10-year-old Martha Sheehan has made broadcasting history as the youngest radio station manager ever! At 10 years and 262 days old, Martha launched 'Fun Kids Space Station' during a special sleepover at the National Space Centre in Leicester, UK. She was completely in charge of the whole on-air broadcast – from the creative concept to the selection of songs that were played on the first show. Martha's official radio station began broadcasting after she pushed a big red button on 9th June, in a planetarium filled with 80 excited children. She has been very busy getting everything ready for the successful launch, planning upcoming features, producing new jingles, and putting together lots of special playlists.

Would you like to work at a radio station?

Do you think it would be fun to be in charge?

Is voting the best way to change things?

Voting can change many things and is often the fairest option, but I feel that the individual's voice, my voice, can't always be heard. Kellie
